

Camryn DiCostanzo

Aspiring Sports Communications Professional – Boston University

As a current junior at Boston University, Camryn DiCostanzo is building skills that will point her in the direction of a sports communications career. After transferring to Boston University at the beginning of her sophomore year, DiCostanzo has been able to complete a majority of the necessary courses required for her public relations major.

Currently, DiCostanzo works as the Communications Intern for the Boston University Men's Ice Hockey team. For this internship, she works closely with the athletes, creating video and photo content for the Twitter and Instagram, as well as live-Tweeting home and away games. She learned tools like Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Premiere, and multiple different organization tactics. This internship took DiCostanzo to Red Hot Hockey in New York City, as well as the Beanpot tournament at TD Garden, working both events.

DiCostanzo also volunteers for BU Athletics, assisting them with their TikTok account, recording video clips for them when needed. Aside from her media positions, she has also spent three years working for a small business within her hometown over school breaks.

Her freshman year of college at Iona University, DiCostanzo earned dean's list honors, and was also a member of their division one lacrosse program before her transfer to Boston University.
